A chap named Lutes got about three sheets in the wind, last Monday afternoon, steered wildly, and collided, to his great detriment, with an outraged Statute of the State of Missouri. In other words, he assaulted Henry Vandergrift in the streets of Arcadia. For this innocent amusement he was pulled up before Judge Dinger on Tuesday, tried before six of his lawful peers, duly fined, and (the fine being paid) told to go and sin no more.

It is said the Iron Mountain Railroad Company are paying at the rate of $2 000 per mouth for cattle killed by trains. Now, while no doubt it is impossible to run trains without killing cattle, it is equally certain that much of the loss is the result of carelesness on the part of employes. Not one train in three regards the law in reference to the speed through towns and viliages, and they dash over crossings and other exposed places with infinite disregard of everything but so many miles per hour. Another source of trouble is the insecurity of the cattle-guards. In many instances they are nothing else than cattle-traps. A cow or horse can pass them easily in a now, I be selve withdraw from the contest enough at its leisure, but when excited they form a complete pen for the affrighted animal. After some inatrumental music by Miss Lulu Faivre of Sa Louis, a drama, "Ecoscliff Hall," was given, the principal characters being supported by Misses L. Faivre, M. Sullivan, M. Fraser, M.
